As Doug Ford said of Hillier, the cheese has slipped off the cracker.
It is something to consider that a small but not insignificant portion of the population is delusional and angry. It's not just the barking mad. A fair number of otherwise functional people hate government, science, mainstream media, people who don't look like them, or pray like them, educated people, etc. it's not just a left or right thing. It's a cohort of the population who could become ungovernable
It presents a real challenge to every government. What to do with the totally alienated who are angry, suspicious, paranoid and resentful.
Dismissing them as extremist and fringe is too easy. They will never vote for us but we still have to govern them
